The Exhilarating Dungeon Adventure Board Game

There are board games that allow individual player to portray or guide a special character that increases its abilities and characteristics or even gain gears as the game continues like the adventure board games. The Dungeon, released in 1975, was innovated by Gary Gygax, David R Megarry, Steve Winter, and S. Schwab. The game designed for two to four players consists of a rulebook, four colored Parcheesi-style playing pieces (white, blue, green, and red). Included in the game which fascinates players is a range of monster and treasure cards which is colored black and white on the front and at the back are color coded representing the different six increasing dungeon levels: gold for first, orange for second, red for third, magenta for fourth, green for fifth, and blue for sixth. The game is played with every player's goal to defeat the monsters and collect as much treasures as possible back to the dungeon entrance. The most recent version of the game is the Dungeon and Dragons.

The Stimulating Monopoly Board Game

Monopoly is the best-selling and most played among the many board games in the United States and around the world with over 500 million people playing it. Charles Darrow in 1935 patented the game and having Mr. Monopoly or Rich Uncle Penny bags as the mascot. This real estate game's objective is to become the richest player and bankrupt all opponents by buying properties, collecting lease fees, and building hotels and houses. The 2- 8 players play in this real estate game comprising of $15,140. 00 worth of money, 22 property title deed cards, 16 community chest cards, 16 chance cards, 32 houses, 12 hotels, and 11 Monopoly tokens, a game board, and 2 dice. The game is played with the players moving the pieces around the board with the roll of the dice. Eliminate your opponents as soon as possible and use your luck to out win your opponents before they do so.

Board Games for Get-together Activities

Known as "The Game for the Whole Brain," Cranium is a party board game of 4-16 people. This game is comprised of several activities and needs a player to have quite a few abilities. Published and made known to the public on 1998 by inventors, Richard Tait and Whit Alexander. The game is played by dividing the players from two to four teams where each team has a mover which is initially set-up on the Planet Cranium start space and the order of the game starts with the player whose birthday is coming up and goes around to the next team in a counterclockwise manner. In order to win the game, the players must perform well in the following four sections of the game namely: Word Worm asking players to define, spell out words, guess words, and unscramble words; creative cat asks players to draw or sculpt the clues using clay; trivia questions are asked in Data Head; and Start performer where players hum a song, impersonating personalities or act out clues.

Fun with Children's Board Games

Children have innate instinct to play that is why there are board games are created to suit every kid's preference and ability. It is a great way to have fun with and get together with the entire family. These games are good for inculcating sportsmanship as well as good and friendly competition among children. These games are also useful to eliminate boredom and blues especially on cold winter day, uncooperative weather, and merely staying indoors. Majority of children's board games are simple to play and does not require too much analysis, counting, and reading but relies mostly on luck. Candy Land, a simple race board game is one of the pioneers in children's board games published in 1949. Some choices of children's board games are the Princess and the Pea, Chutes and Ladders, Pirates on the High, Walt Disney's Peter Pan, Scooby Doo Gold Rush, Sleeping Beauty, Uncle Wiggily, and Snakes and Ladders.
