Board Games in Social Gatherings

Cranium is also called 'The Game for the Whole Brain,' played by 4-16 individuals. Each player must possess a multitude of talents and skills since the game has many activities involved. In 1998, Whit Alexander and Richard Tait created and published the game. The players are divided into groups of 2 to 4 with each team having a mover and begins at the Planet Cranium starting space where the person with the upcoming birthday plays first followed by the next team in a counterclockwise direction. In order to win the game, the players must perform well in the following four sections of the game namely: Word Worm asking players to define, spell out words, guess words, and unscramble words; creative cat asks players to draw or sculpt the clues using clay; trivia questions are asked in Data Head; and Start performer where players hum a song, impersonating personalities or act out clues.

Board Games Using Physical Skills

Board games of Physical Skills or also known as dexterity games are those that need coordination, physical, and mental abilities to dominate the game. They put the players on challenge since they need good judgment, nimbleness, and coordination. Examples of these games include Crokinole, an almost 140 year old game developed in Canada by Eckhardt Wettlaufer. The game which is a combination of English, French, East Indian, and German games consists of a board with three concentric rings corresponding to certain points and checker sized disks. In the game, which is played by two teams and each team consists of two to four players, the checker sized disks are tapped or flipped from the outer edge of the gaming board and with the intention of hitting the board's center but to hit the opponents disks that are already on the board otherwise the turn is considered foul. Alternative picks for board games that require physical skills are Carrom, Kerplunk, Subbuteo, Jenga, Toppole, Twister, Perfection, Carabande and other board games that utilize physical skills.
